A Brand plucked from the Burning.

Words by ARTHUR J. LAMB.

Music by KERRY MILLS.

Valse Moderato.

The wedding bells ring sweetly
And voices whisper low,
As down the aisle together
As just outside her cottage

Up on the quiet landscape
The golden moonlight gleams,

A bride and groom go In holy bonds of wedlock.

They're sitting and dreaming She's dreaming of the daughter

Who's bound each trusting heart. For better or for worse been for years away. From whom she's had no let-and till death these two shall part. Two women stand to-ter for many a weary day. And now on hear-gather. Outside the church's door. And of the voices. Her eyes are opened wide. To see her bride they're talking. They knew her years before. She own dear daughter. With someone by her side. "I'm was so wild and way-ward mar-ried, moth-er dar-ling bride-groom know her sto-ry?

as they kiss each oth-er

“She must have loved to wed”
To one who loves me true
Then soft the oth-er said:
The glad tears fall a-new

CHORUS.

'Tis a brand that was plucked from the burn-ing
'Tis a soul that is saved, so they say

'Tis a wom-an from dark-ness
